THE BOTTOM RAIL IS ON FOR NOW, and our Glant is not blind! He asks no guide to lead him; he has the props of the State, and he has the power of the common pillars to avenge his particular wrong. His eyes have been opened by free education, and his strength crowned by a free ballot. He is by no means led in captivity by his ignorance, or set up in our midst as a laughing stock, or chained to grind in our mill. For he is a master now. He looks abroad with the tranquil smile of conscious strength, and paralyzes the nation at his will. Since fatal Runnede our race has vaulted its liberties under the shield of a sworn jury, but that sacred jury has degenerated into the mere tool of dexterous barrators, who rule our awakened Glant by appeals to his generous sympathies or by reckless, inflaming the bitterness of his class hatreds. The ever-availing brood of feeble pettifoggers who take to this trade have established their theory of the necessity of a proof of malice, and on that assumption, with windy fury and trades-union eloquence, they base their ruinous suits. The state's grand cry is: "Smite him on the pocket nerve; reduce him to the ranks!" and see how his haughtiness will wilt at this threat. Under these conditions we find that penury is the loftiest virtue, while an appearance of opulence may be safely taken as the sign of an oppressor whom it will be meritorious and profitable to bleed. Conscience under a perversion of law naturally follows. The victim threatens and is run in by accepting a promised settlement out of court, and the shyster pockets his half of whatever the spoil may be. His present success may be pretty fairly measured by his neediness, his shamelessness and his greed. Our New Virginia is big with a multitude of this unpeppable corruption, and a black night approaches when it will be proper for brave men to tremble at the sight of a man who, half in sorrow, half in scorn, a foreigner who, during fifty years, has witnessed the decay of successive Confederate ideals.
